RESOURCES

There are a wide variety of resources available to the student of economic thought. A familiarity with these resources will broaden and deepen your experience in this class.

WEBSITES

There are many websites that are of use to a historian of economic thought. Among those that will be cited/used/referenced this semester are the following:

The McMaster University Archive for the History of Economic Thought http://socserv2.socsci.mcmaster.ca/~econ/ugcm/3ll3/

The Liberty Fund Library of Economics and Liberty
http://www.econlib.org/library/classics.html

The Liberty Fund Online Library of Liberty
http://oll.libertyfund.org/

The Nobel Prize in Economics e-Museum
http://nobelprize.org/nobel_prizes/economics/laureates/

The Akamac E-text Links Page
http://www.cpm.ehime-u.ac.jp/AkamacHomePage/Akamac_E-text_Links/Akamac_E-text_Links.html

The Mises Institute Online Library
https://mises.org/library/books

The Acton Institute’s Markets and Morality Website
http://www.marketsandmorality.com/index.php/mandm/issue/archive

The History of Economics Society Website
http://historyofeconomics.org/

The Internet Encyclopedia of Philosophy
http://www.iep.utm.edu/

The Internet Modern History Sourcebook
http://legacy.fordham.edu/halsall/mod/modsbook.asp

The Internet Medieval History Sourcebook
http://legacy.fordham.edu/halsall/sbook.asp

TEXTBOOKS

There are several History of Economic Thought textbooks on the market. If you are going on to graduate school, two that you should at least be familiar with are:

Additional texts that I make frequent use of are:

Additional texts, including a representative list of texts on specific subjects and specific thinkers, can be found at the Economics Subject Centre of the United Kingdom’s Higher Education Academy Resource Site:

http://www.economicsnetwork.ac.uk/subjects/historyofeconomics

CLASSIC TEXTS IN ECONOMICS

There are several classic texts that a well-rounded economist ought to have read at least once in their career. Every economist has a different list. Here is mine:

- Turgot, Reflections on the Formation and Distribution of Wealth, 1766
- Knight, Frank, Risk, Uncertainty and Profit, 1921.